CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

PROJECT USEFUL

BACKGROUND

Starting in 1954 the Central Intelligence Agency annually has presented a two-week orientation course, known as Project USEFUL, for members of the Military Establishment. This program, coordinated with the War Plans Staff/DDP, has been primarily for the Unified and Specified Commands, plus certain representatives of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and more recently the Defense Intelligence Agency. The content of the courses has dealt with the organization and functions of the Central Intelligence Agency with emphasis on our capabilities in war planning and contingency situations.

In 1964, Mr. John A. McCone, the Director of Central Intelligence, called for an abridged version of Project USEFUL to promote further understanding and cooperation in the local U.S. Intelligence Community. Since then, the Central Intelligence Agency has offered a semi-annual two-day orientation on the general organization and functions of the Agency to senior members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Defense Intelligence Agency.

PURPOSE AND OBJECTIVES

The purpose of this two-day orientation is to introduce key officials of the Central Intelligence Agency who will discuss the organization and functions of their components. Emphasis will be on the interrelationships with other members of the Intelligence Community. Because of the relatively short period of time this must be considered as merely an introduction to the role of the Central Intelligence Agency with the primary objectives of an indoctrination for members of the Defense Establishment.
